

The Stainless Steel Rat Saves the World

HARRY HARRISON

Slippery Jim di Griz the living legend has given up his 'criminal' ways for a wife and children. Has the hero of old, the impeccable foe of malefactors, gone to seed? Not likely!

Someone is meddling with time, altering the past so as to eliminate the present. The confusion is finally located in the year 1984 in an ancient nation called the United States of America. To save civilisation, the Stainless Steel Rat hurls centuries through time – in both directions!

A Dream of Wessex

CHRISTOPHER PRIEST

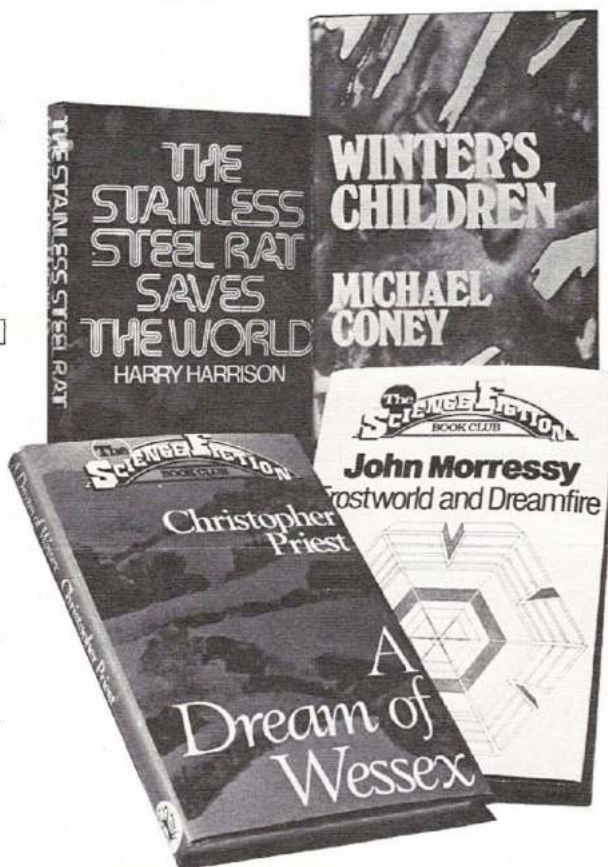

'Christopher Priest', said Ursula Le Guin in The Times Literary Supplement 'is a versatile, autonomous writer from whom we can expect nothing expectable'. In this, his fifth novel, he turns to the Wessex Foundation, an industrially-funded electronic think tank, and an imagined world of the future. It is full of evocative contrasts: from the stress of contemporary life to the tranquil, idyllic Wessex, from emotional turbulence and sexual possessiveness to a simple love affair. 199pp

Winter's Children

MICHAEL CONEY

Long after the holocaust, there is endless snow. 'It was not always cold', says the Old Man, but no one listens. The countryside is buried, and a small community survives in the bell tower of a church, linked with what remains of the outside world by tunnels, hunting the ferocious, telepathic Pads for food.

A brilliant portrayal of small groups of people, struggling for their lives, defeatist, obsessive and selfish – yet when danger threatens they unquestioningly band together.

Frostworld & Dreamfire

JOHN MORRESSY

The remarkable and inscrutable Onhla tribe existed for centuries on Hraggellon – until a mysterious plague destroyed them all bar one survivor, Hult.

Hult believes the ancient legend about a group of Onhla taken away to another world. If he can find them, his tribe will live again. His quest brings him, for the first time, face to face with city people, other-world beings, politics – and he knows nothing of the power of human emotions.

WRITERS OF THE 21st CENTURY

ISAAC ASIMOV

Edited by J D OLANDER and M H GREENBERG

Why is he so popular? The way he handles characters, and mixes mystery and sf – but above all is an intangible element of genius. In this book critics, and Asimov himself, delve into his work. 247pp

ARTHUR C CLARKE

Edited by J D OLANDER and M H GREENBERG

There are many images of Clarke – space explorer, brilliant 'hard' sf extrapolator, slick commercial writer. Paradoxically, although his work is noted for its exact scientific detail, it has become associated with mysticism and myth. 254pp

ROBERT A HEINLEIN

Edited by J D OLANDER and M H GREENBERG

Discover the real Heinlein. He has given us major insights into power, justice, social order, love, sex and immortality... yet Stranger in a Strange Land appeared to contradict everything he'd been saying for 20 years. 268pp
