

IAN WATSON

'Ian Watson is the author of some of the most intelligent sf this side of the Atlantic or Channel.' — The Sunday Times

An English graduate from Balliol College, Oxford, Ian Watson started writing sf with a short story for New Worlds in 1969 and turned professional in 1976. His novels include The Jonah Kit — winner of the British Sf Award, The Martian Inca and Alien Embassy (both SFBC selections), and Under Heaven's Bridge (in collaboration with Michael Bishop).

DEATHHUNTER IAN WATSON

'Ian Watson is incapable of writing a dull book, and Deathhunter is as lively and as readable as anything he has written.' Brian Stableford, Arena SF

Jim Todhunter is a guide in the House of Death — the place where those due to die come to compose themselves. One of his most difficult assignments is to help murderer Nathan Weinberger become reconciled to dying. But Weinberger has a startling theory: that humans aware they are about to die emit a chemical signal which attracts a strange predator who snatches the soul and carries it off into the afterlife. Together, they build a cage to trap the creature called Death... 173pp

GOD'S WORLD IAN WATSON

We're naked in High Space, seeing it directly: intense in incoherence. Hideous bubbling things live in this zone. Worm shapes burrow through the air, ingesting it, squeezing it out. Living balloons of light suck and pump. We're adrift in the bloodstream of some great beast of light...

When a ship is captured by insect-like creatures, the Group-ones, six members of the space expedition escape to the planet 'God's World', where fantasy becomes reality. But are the Group-ones really the enemy they seem — or does 'God's World' pose a more sinister threat? 7½ x 4¼in / 254pp
