FIRST NOTCH

With No Place Like Earth the Science Fiction Book Club completes its first year of publication. As with all pioneer ventures, we have had moments of discouragement and also the thrill of breaking new ground, but above all we are convinced more than ever before that there is a very real desire for the Club to go on and to grow.

On the centre pages of SF News will be found the next three Club selections. Asimov and Van Vogt—two leading story tellers of science fiction—are truly members' own selections—the letters we have received asking for these two writers leave no doubt about that. Vonnegut is a newcomer to science fiction but "Player Piano", standing head and shoulders above any recent work, is a natural for the Club.

* * * * *

The Club needs more and more members. Science Fiction is talked about almost everywhere and if members hear their friends and acquaintances asking "What is science fiction all about?" they should see that the question does not go unanswered. If you are not the argumentative type, simply offer the enrolment leaflet or give the person concerned our
