THE DEMOLISHED MAN

by ALFRED BESTER

ALFRED BESTER, long known as a writer of science fiction short stories, achieved an instantaneous success with his first full-length novel, The Demolished Man. It was voted the most outstanding novel of the year by the Eleventh World Science Fiction Convention, and it has recently received a Certificate of Merit in the 1954 International Fantasy Award.

The Demolished Man is a story of murder and detection in the twenty-fourth century, with telepathic highly developed and, technically most interesting, telepathic conversation mingling with normal speech, all most competently and convincingly done.

The press gave a full measure of praise to the book: "The most successful fusion to date of science fiction and the detective story" wrote the New York Herald Tribune; "Intelligently written with the accent on psychology and is at times both gripping and humorous" was the verdict of Astounding Science Fiction; "The climax is beautifully handled, and has elements of horror that are unusually powerful" wrote the Middlesex Independent. "Anyone who is not frightened of taxing his imagination to the utmost will
